

As Charge technologist at Victora Hospital's Nuclear Medicine Department, Jillian Bruneau leads with empathy and quiet strength, setting a clinical standard that her colleagues deeply respect. Her work on the Port-a-cath access committee is already making a significant impact, improving care for oncology patients by helping standardize protocols across the province.

Jill currently serves on the CAMRT-MB Provincial Advisory Council, helping to guide the profession at the provincial level, and has previously volunteered on the MAMRT Board of Directors and MAMRT's Self-regulation committee. She shares her time generously – mentoring students, creating inclusive spaces during MRT week, and even enrolling in French classes to better support her patients.

But Jill's compassion doesn't end at work. From years of volunteering with Manitoba Underdogs rescue, to offering a warm blanket and a kind word to an anxious patient, she shows us that service comes in many forms – and that true leadership is about uplifting others.

Jill never seeks the spotlight, but today, we are proud to shine it on her.
